THE GAZETTE.

THESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 6, 1860.

MEDALLED HEROES - One of the finest old soldiers in the British army has just gone to his last account, in his 73d year. Sir Henry Wakelyn Smith, G. C. B., commonly called Sir Harry Smith whose death is announced in the papers by the Asia, should have horne Ublique as his motto; for in every part of the world he had seen service. South and North America, Spain and Portugal, France, Belgium, South Africa and India, had contributed to supply him with laurels and medals and stars. A tall, thin, spare man, with a face like a military map covered with intersecting lines, the result of exposure to the sun, he was a very beau in his personal adornment, and he displayed all his medals and clasps on every possible occasion. He was as vain as he was brave, and combined in his person the opposites of a very good soldier and a very bad diplomatist. He won honor in the former capacity, and lost the government of the Cape of Good Hope in the latter. Vanity made him rash and incautious; and his want of prudence well nigh cost the British their South African colony

But "Sir Harry" was not peculiar in his military coxcombry. The love of personal display is a striking feature of the British officer. He will fight to the death that he may have a silver medal on his breast. Except for the battle of Waterloo no medals had been assigned to the English troops for any past service until 1847 when the Duke of Richmond having wrung from Parliament a recognition of the merits of the men who fought in the Peninsula, an immediate claim was put in for a similar decoration for every battle or skirmish in which the English had been engaged for the previous half century, and the applications could not be refused. The consequence was that some men had four or five medals on their breast, and sailors clasps for every separate action. Among the officers was a Colonel Humbley, of the same rifle corps as Sir Harry Smith. He had been everywhere and frequently wounded in action. But, not satisfied with the medals he bore suspended to his Peninsula clasp, enclosed in silver net work, a bullet which had been extracted from his left arm, and to his Waterloo medal was attached, similarly encased. a bullet which had been removed from his os ilardly content with these evidences of service, he carried in each waistcoat pocket a little paper box, in one of which was enclosed pieces of broken bone taken from the shattered arm, and in the other, chips of decayed bone which occasionally came away from the forehead, and these were shown to his acquain tances as curious relics of personal valor .-No wonder that men will pay large sums of money for commissions in the British army when they attach importance to such small matters as these. FACTS VS. INFERENCES .- The facts seen in table turning, are credible enough. It is a mistake to suppose that our doubts fall on them; our doubts fall on the facts not seen, but inferred; because it is these, and these alone, which make spirit-rapping and table turning mysterious. What an honest man tells me he saw, I will believe he saw, if it skenticism begins when he ceases to narrate what he actually saw, and substitutes his interpretation of it. Thus the table moves, and raps are heard, without any agency visible to the spectator. This fact is by no means incredible. There are many phenomena witnessed, of which the causes are completely hidden from us; and little as we may be able to explain how a table can rock, or run about the room, when we cannot detect the agency by which it is moved, this is no ground for denying the fact. But spiritualists make an enormous mistake: they suppose that because they can detect no person present moving the table, or producing the raps, it is thereby proved that no person did these things: because they are wholly unable to explain how these things were produced, 'it is evident that no physical causes could have pro-The childish logic is paraded by men of talent and culture, who appeal to the respec- low. tability of the witnesses they call to testify to the facts! They do not understand that the facts which they have witnessed are very simple, very credible, and would be intelligible to a child, if other facts which are now concealed were once made visible. Nothing is more inexplicable than a good conjuring trick; nothing is more intelligible when the trick is explained. There is some one detail conjuror has successfully diverted our atten- | CLASS HOTEL is guaranteed. tion, or because he has been quick enough to ballie us; and this one detail makes the whole atorious. If we are to accept the narratives of respectable witnesses as guarantees of the truth of Spiritualism, or if we are to trust the evidence of our own senses as irresistible preofs of the truth of any inference we may make respecting them, there will be no limit to credulity; Robert Houdin and Bosco will be high priests, with supernatural powers.-Blackwood's Magazine.

OUR BECKY DOES .- An English paper says that a young damsel who is engaged, and will shortly be united to a gallant son of Neptime, lately visited the Mariner's Church. During the sermon the parson discoursed eloquently and with much earnestness of the dangers and temptation of the sailor. He concluded by asking. "Is there one who thinks anything of him who wears a tarpaulin bat and blue jacket, or a pair of trousers made of duck? In short, is there one who cares aught for the poor sailor?" A little girl, a sister of the damsel, jumped up, and looking archly at her sister, said, in a tone loud enough for every one to hear, "Yes, sir, our Becky does."

An old Scotch Presbyterian domestic was once invited by her mistress, a noble lady. imbued with Tractarian notions, to go with her to an Episcopal church, fitted up according to the most recent fashion, and especially rich in a full choir service. On returning, the servant was asked what she thought of the music, &c. "On," she replied, "it's vara | nials may be seen. bonny, vara bonny; but oh, my lady, it's an awful' way of spending the Sabbath."
